

About The Japan Times Jobfinder

"Today, with the increase of non-Japanese firms and the globalization of businesses, language ability has become a valuable commodity in the Japanese job market. The demand for staff who have strong English-language English skills have increased dramatically.

Established in 1897, The Japan Times is the nation's oldest English-language newspaper and holds the biggest share of subscribers. To further enhance The Japan Times Online's classifieds, we are introducing a new system designed to meet the needs of both job-hunters and companies. Its uniqueness lies in the fact that all the site contents will be in English. This is what The Japan Times presents with confidence: The Japan Times Jobfinder. "

As a powerful employment resource, particularly one geared toward linguistic skills, please note the following strengths of The Japan Times Jobfinder:

1) A loyal user base carried over from The Japan Times Classifieds

Our users from the former Japan Times Classified site will be carried over to the newly launched Japan Times Jobfinder, which guarantees a steady influx of skilled bilingual workers.

2) All English employments ads and information

Readers of The Japan Times and users of our Web site all have a proficiency in the English language. As all the site contents are in English only, we believe we can target native English speakers, bilingual staff and those who have with high levels of English-language proficiency.

3) Implementation of crucial job-employment site features

The site provides industry-standard features that will enable users to search through our classifieds, apply online, bookmark their favorite pages, subscribe to newsletters and be scouted by recruitment companies (our Jobfinder Scout will be launched in October), thereby guaranteeing a high frequency of applicants.

4) Utilization of a company blog system

Though few classifieds sites offer opportunities for companies to make announcements freely on the site, The Japan Times Jobfinder is using a blog system in which companies or employment agencies are given freedom to publish original PR content on the site.
